

Manly

Maybe Bill Gates , James Cameron, and Arnold Schwarzenegger are the issues here?

Political lobbying

Also, he or she with the most amount of dollars to throw at advertising, shall win.

For example something interesting that I uncovered after the whole Sam Beckman free issue with FTX is that he essentially bribed all these politicians sports athletes, crypto influencers etc. to save that bitcoin was bad for the planet whatever, and to get the FTT token or other versions of it was “for the planet“.

Follow the money

Money talks. Words weep.

Essentially the idea that when it comes to almost anything in modern day times, just follow the money. Now that we have ChatGPT, and search capabilities, the very very easy thing you could do is tap late and search the political donations of a certain political candidate, and you could tie it to a certain incorporation etc. I think this is amazing because it’s squashes all these Ridiculous conspiracy theories.

In fact, I truly do believe that ChatGPT might be one of the greatest boons to humanity of all time. Why? Because you could’ve sent you a search all the conspiracy theories, and discover whether they are true or not, and also... The implications of it.

For example, take any YouTube theory or podcast theory, plug it into ChatGPT the paid premium one, search it... And see what you get.

For example let us say it is true that the Ross Childs or whatever or this whole conspiracy theory of the Jewish making system exist, the more important question... does it matter?

Assume everything was true. Would it matter? Especially in your own personal lived reality life?

Then the second more difficult thought, what if all the conspiracy theories were 100% false? And they were just promoted by some weird 400 pound obese man, living in his mom's basement, high off of marijuana and shrooms, and all he does is play World of Warcraft, if that were the case... Would it matter?

Or another version of ERIC's razor, assume all of the negative toxic comments you have ever read in your life, whether on your own website or blog, via email or text message, phone call, YouTube comments, Facebook comments Twitter comments Instagram comments, whatever... What if all of the negative toxic comments and even the critiques on other websites, or blogs, were in fact, 100% malicious bots? Would this change your opinion on things?

Obviously it would!

Burn the ships behind you

Burn the ships, burn the butts, burn the digital slave ship bots behind you!

I have a good visual for you; imagine that all of these ships, sailing in, are essentially all of the mega technology corporations, and let us say that they are filled with malicious bots, robots. One of the issues with Internet based bots, robots is that they have no physical form.

And we all know, if you get into a fist fight with a robot, you're going to lose. And even more worse, if you try to get in a flame war with a bot a robot on Twitter or whatever, you're going to lose. No matter how good or convincing your argument is.

Kiss my big cyber dick!

the funny thing is I am probably one of the biggest proponents for ChatGPT and AI, but the real critical issue here is that you cannot say crass things on it or with it. for example, good luck writing a South Park script with ChatGPT.

you need to spend more time outside!

Another very useful thing I learned from the pumping iron book, is that they actually spend a lot of time tanning! The reason why this is so important is that when you spend more time tanning, you get more sunlight, melanin, I wonder if melanin is actually the opposite of melatonin, like it wakes you up! And also, vitamin D and all these other good feel good hormones.

Trust nobody with an opinion who lives in his mom's basement.

Why I am so happy

Because I own a lot of bitcoin, because I have the best wife of all time, the most beautiful and most terrible wife of all time; I was thinking about it, if it wasn't for Cindy, I would probably be a Starbucks barista somewhere, or even worse, working for Google Amazon Facebook etc.

When Cindy and I were both undergraduate at UCLA, and I was studying sociology, ebony shaw, one of the counselors at UCLA, sent out an email newsletter looking for interns at demand media, yeehaw.com, where I got my first internship, and where I got my first real job, which was essentially my platform or my springboard to start my blog, start shooting street photography in Santa Monica third Street promenade, start making my viral YouTube videos etc.

In fact, looking back I am so grateful that I had that steady 9-to-5 job because I was able to live in West LA, near Sautelle, pay my rent, which was around $700 a month at the time, and even though I was living paycheck to paycheck with my Practical $40,000 a year salary, at least I had some economic freedom to blog start my blog, start building up my online presence, without having to worry about paying the rent.

So friend, if you are currently working for a tech company and working remotely or partially remotely whatever; consider it the best blessing of all time; the 100% economic security of your job, and just do whatever huts subtotal on the side, I think this is really the best way to win and succeed!

And then, once you no longer have any economic fears or concerns, then, can you truly innovate, create something new! Because whenever you do a side hustle, it doesn't have to have a social economic payoff, you could just do it for fun! For play!

Funny enough even the word foreplay, literally means for, play!

Make play cool again!